

Scholarship Information

For those students seeking scholarships, we encourage registering with a free online scholarship search service called FastWeb by the end of their junior year. Also, take into consideration these three avenues to obtain scholarships:

1. Institutional Scholarships: Many colleges and universities offer merit scholarships based on the student's GPA and standardized test scores. When contacting the school for admission information, inquire as to their specific scholarship criteria. Many schools have earlier application deadlines for students applying for scholarships, as well as specific application material. To ensure the criteria is met, students should complete their scholarship research process by their junior summer, and be prepared to apply as soon as possible in the early fall of their senior year.

2. National Corporate Scholarships: A wide array of companies offer scholarships through an application/essay process. Coca Cola, Radio Shack, and Discover Card are a few examples of this. Check the College Counseling office for more details.

3. Miscellaneous organizations, places of employment: Check with your employer for scholarships they may offer. In addition, some community service organizations offer scholarships based on ethnic background and specific needs. Check the College Counseling office for more details.
